

Susan has trained as an Allied Health Professional working in acute and community settings before starting a career in Public Health.

She moved to Grampian in 1995 as the co-ordinator of the Grampian Heart Campaign – a local charitable organisation. She has undertaken a number of roles in Public Health in health improvement, health intelligence and service planning before becoming the Deputy Director of Public Health in 2000 and Director of Public Health in 2016.

As Director of Public Health, Susan is actively involved with a range of academic and service partnerships including Community Planning Partnerships in the North East through which she strives to improve outcomes for children and their families.